The Tenth Anniversary Dinner of the Overseas Press Club proved to be the best Annual Dinner which was ever held, according to OPC members, their guests and news-men who covered the affair. Stories and pictures were on the first pages of the newspapers and the dinner was covered by all the newsreels and the NBC and CBS television units. "The Voice of America" broadcast the entire affair and Station WRUL, the World Wide Broadcasting Company and the Armed Forces Radio net-work also covered the dinner and all the speeches.

The actual attendance was almost one thousand members and guests, even though several papers reported two thousand being present. The program was divided into three distinct parts -- the first of the three speakers listed in the invitation; the second of the awards and the third of the speeches around General Marshall.

Jessica Dragonette, lyric soprano, sang the "Star Spangled Banner" and later sang "Buttons and Bows", a favorite of General Marshall. Another favorite of the General is reported to be "Rock of Ages" but the Committee decided that that song would not be appropriate for our particular gathering. Following the reception in the East Foyer, for which Leo Dryer and his orchestra played, the dinner began about 8:10 P.M. The first course was lobster and crabmeat Louis. Mrs. W. W. Chaplin, who was hostess for a front table of distinguished guests, saw Mrs. Marshall, General Carter and Mrs. Marshall's son and son-in-law, Mr. Clifton Brown and Mr. Edmund Coles, searching through the salad. When asked what they were looking for, they said "Shrimp". No shrimp was found and so they signaled the General that he could go ahead and eat it-- Marshall is allergic to shrimp.

The dinner was served in record time by the Waldorf under the direction of C. C. Philippe so that the petite marmite, the roast beef and the brandied cherries Jubilee were all cleared away by 9:25 P.M. Camel cigarettes were on all the tables and three very pretty girls distributed sample boxes of Loft candies to the guests. The flowers on the dais were donated by Charles Pappas, of the Metropolitan Florists Association.

Major General Frederick Osborn, U. S. Delegate to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, was the first speaker and praised the work of General Marshall. Ambassador Morgenstierne, the second speaker, was acclaimed as he came to the rostrum when the thousand guests at the banquet stood up in tribute to the courageous stand of Norway.

"We are almost allies once again" said Mr. Morgenstierne. "Only an aggressor has anything to fear from the Atlantic Pact. All that Norway wants is to be absolutely certain that through solidarity we can hold the frontiers of freedom, law and democracy." He continued, "We do not feel that neutrality has any relation to the realities of today."

The programs had been illustrated by Aloys Derso, famous cartoonist, and proved to be the subject of much enjoyment during the evening. Mr. Derso presented General Marshall with the original of the drawings, which portrayed most of the people at the head tables. Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., Republican from Massachusetts, who is a member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, stated that "he was completely convinced that the outbreak of aggression and violence and war in Europe will not, cannot and must not find America sitting idly by and doing nothing." Senator Lodge, in honoring General Marshall, said that "the crises during the past decade had been recognized first by Marshall, had been met first by him and solved first by him."

OPC AWARDS FOR 1948 were presented by W. W. Chaplin, President of the OPC. In the first five categories, they consisted of engraved Hamilton wrist watches in gold with alligator bands and hand engraved sheepskins.

For the best reporting in the press of foreign affairs from abroad: Harold Callender of the New York Times, Paris Bureau. In Mr. Callender's absence, the award was accepted for him by Edwin L. James, managing editor of the Times, who made one of the most amusing speeches of the evening with his caustic statements and ready wit.

For the best reporting by radio of foreign news from abroad: Henry Cassidy, Paris Bureau of the National Broadcasting Company. Mr. Cassidy was "piped" in from London for an acceptance speech of the award which was accepted for him by vice president in charge of news of NBC, Bill Brooks.

For the best interpretation of foreign news in the press: James E. Reston, New York Times Bureau in Washington. "Scotty" as he is known to his friends, accepted the award with a few short words of thanks.

For the best interpretation of foreign news by radio: Elmer Davis of the American Broadcasting Company, who came up from Washington to accept the award and make a short acceptance speech.

For the best reporting of foreign news by a photographer (given for the first time this year): Jack Birns of Life Magazine, who is now in Burma covering the revolution there. Mr. Daniel Longwell, chairman of the Board of Editors of Life, accepted the award for Birns.

The George Polk Memorial Award, (also given for the first time) for the display of courage "over and beyond the call of duty" in gathering the news abroad, went to Homer Bigart of the New York Herald Tribune. We understand that Homer, having arrived a few days before from Europe, "sans smoking" had to buy a tuxedo for the affair so Bill Chaplin told him that the $500 check which constituted the Award, would partly reimburse him for this expense. A hand lettered sheepskin was also given to Mr. Bigart. Mr. Chaplin thanked Davidson Taylor, CBS vice-president, for the check which was given to Bigart.

Lt. Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer, acting chief of staff of the U.S. Army, had flown up in a private plane from Washington with Wallace Graham, the President's physician, General Grow and John Alison, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, all guests of DR. CORTEZ ENLOE, member of the Dinner Committee. Gen. Wedemeyer had words of warm praise for General Marshall and related several amusing incidents about him.

Dean Acheson, Secretary of State, in referring to the news which had broken at 5 P.M. the night of the banquet on the removal of Molotoff, who was succeeded by Vishinsky, said that "he was wondering how Mr. Vishinsky feels about this situation". In an extremely witty and thoughtful speech, Dean Acheson, said that it took more courage than one man can summon to succeed General Marshall as Secretary of State. He said that when he went to work for Mr. Marshall in the State Department, the General said that he had "no feelings about anything -- except a few which he reserved for Mrs. Marshall."

General Marshall, when presented with a beautiful Golden Royal typewriter by Chaplin, said "that he might need a gold plated kidney rather than a gold plated typewriter". General Marshall in a twenty minute speech said that "The European Recovery Program had made more progress in the last five months toward cementing peace among nations than in the previous five hundred years". The fighting spirit of our former Secretary of State and Chief of Staff was as evident as it was when he spoke to the Overseas Press Club from the same platform right after the Battle of the Bulge and reassured everyone that we had the conflict well in hand.

Mrs. Marshall was introduced to the audience who paid tribute to her by a standing acclaim. Time did not permit the Chairman to call on the other close colleagues of General Marshall, who were seated at the head table. A distinguished list of guests were seated everywhere in the Grand Ballroom of the Waldorf which was brimful. The general feeling of camaraderie was prevalent during the entire evening and members present complimented Louis Lochner and the Dinner Committee on a superb job of planning and execution.

Our thanks go to Robert Waddell, president of the Hamilton Watch Company, who gave the five award watches and to the Royal Typewriter Company who contributed the typewriter for Marshall. National Distillers provided Mount Vernon whiskey for the reception for distinguished guests and Frankfurt Distillers provided a case of Four Roses for the party held in the OPC suite after the dinner.
